Sleeping-Room Draperies, and Carpets

Dr. S. W. Fowler on Dust-Breeding!

Fearing in mind the danger from loaded air, we should exercise care in ventilating from our bed rooms all hangings, curtains of woollen or thick cotton stuffs, especially liable to retain dust, and to become receptacles for germs, and in this connection we would recommend carpets made of cotton rather than of wool, floors of which retain moisture, in the order in which it is mentioned, the best, and certainly the most healthful. Without the slightest desire to interfere with the highest comfort, convenience or elegance of household arrangements, we consider it unwise to encourage the use of heavy curtains, thick carpets, and soft beds for a sleeping room. Such articles are considered necessary by many, but they are somewhat objectionable, and should be avoided by those who are subject to throat or lung disease. Light, cheap, washable fabrics are to be preferred for curtains, and the floors are best covered with matting, or with rugs which can be taken out of doors and beaten. Hair mattresses, resting on a woven wire spring mattress, frame, or nothing to be between the sleeper and the wire mattress, are the best. Feather beds are unhealthful, and should be avoided. Pillows are preferable to bolsters, and should be filled with hair, or with the down of fowls, rather than with feathers. A wash-able hair mattress, resting on a woven wire spring mattress, frame, or nothing to be between the sleeper and the wire mattress, are the best. Feather beds are unhealthful, and should be avoided. Pillows are preferable to bolsters, and should be filled with hair, or with the down of fowls, rather than with feathers. The poorest and cheapest hair is to be preferred to the finest curled hair, provided the latter is mixed with wool or feathers.
